

Real Payrises for All

Pay in Britain is at the same level it was in 2005. This stagnation is unprecedented in British history. It means the benefits of the government bailouts and technological advances of recent years haven't gone to workers. Millions have had pay cuts year after year as inflation roars ahead.

But people are fighting back. Workers that have a trade union are demanding a fairer deal and other workers are organising to get unions to achieve better pay.

We stand with workers and trade unions to demand a real pay rise for all: £15 per hour minimum wage, above-inflation pay rises for nurses, teachers and all public sector workers, banning zero-hours contracts and reversing cruel benefit sanctions.

A Green New Deal

As millions struggle to pay their energy bills, fossil fuel giants report record profits. Climate breakdown gathers pace with warm seas, melting ice and prolonged heat waves.

The equation is simple: on one side, the profits of energy companies, banks and major investors; on the other, rising costs for consumers and a wrecked planet.

We have to turn things around with a Green New Deal to create good union jobs, bring down bills and rapidly decarbonise. There is so much to do: build a new energy infrastructure, electrify production, expand public transport, insulate our homes and restore nature.

Housing for the Many

The cost of housing is much too high. Rents have been out of control for years and now mortgage costs are surging as interest rates are unnecessarily pushed up by the Bank of England. Over a million families are on housing waiting lists and a quarter of a million don't have a home at all.

Homes shouldn't be a commodity. Housing is a human right. We all deserve decent, safe, warm and affordable places to call our own.

That's why tenants groups and housing activists all over the country are organising to bring down the cost and increase the quality of housing. We stand with them to demand a rent freeze, an end to no-fault evictions, a mass insulation programme and an urgent council home building programme.

Tax the Rich to Save the NHS

Our NHS and all our public services are struggling. That's what happens after years of austerity and privatisation.

We're told time and again that there's no money for the services that give us freedom and make society more civilised. But they are wrong. There's plenty of money, it's just in the wrong places.

We can give the services we all rely on the investment they need by taxing the wealth of the super rich, the incomes of the highest earners and the profits of big business properly.

When we do, we can restore our NHS and crumbling public realm to full health, reverse privatisation and build a National Care Service to support us all through old age.

Welcome Refugees and Build a World of Peace

The number of people forcibly displaced around the world is the highest in human history. In the last decade, it has doubled to 110 million people.

As climate breakdown advances and war is chosen over peace, these tragic numbers are set to increase. And with that, politicians scapegoat these refugees - humans, just like us, seeking a place of safety - for an economic crisis they had no part in creating.

To defeat the siren calls of the hard right, we replace hostility with hospitality. Refugees deserve support and have so much to offer our society.

We demand a humane migration system, which gives asylum seekers the right to work, healthcare and housing. We must work towards a world of peace without nuclear weapons and where conflicts are resolved through diplomacy.
