

The next federal election will be one of the most important in this country's history.

Our current progressive leaders and candidates must agree to support and work with each other to achieve policies that secure the future of Canada.

Our plan is to mobilize our campaign on four fronts to pressure progressive parties to cooperate during the next election:

1. We are speaking directly to Party leadership to argue for the necessity of cooperation.
2. We are convening a coalition of national organizations to lead a public campaign supporting this initiative (working through their national and local chapters and membership).
3. Through national and local organizations we will work to catalyze a bottom-up, grass-roots movement across the country to work with riding associations and local candidates to cooperate.
4. Where necessary we will encourage local chapters to identify and rally support for "unity candidates," those candidates best positioned to win against the Conservatives in local ridings.

Take Action to Cooperate for Canada

The Challenge and the Opportunity

Canadians are concerned about rising costs and corporate greed, family health and wellbeing, runaway global heating, honouring Indigenous communities and their treaty rights, and providing accessible day care, national dental and pharmacare programs.

Our current electoral system can undermine the concerns of Canadians by dividing the votes of those with shared interests into four different parties. Split four ways, voters may never see these issues raised on the floor of the House of Commons.

Cooperation will ensure Canadians are heard and their needs and interests addressed.

Our Plan

We are asking Liberals, New Democrats, Greens, and members of the Bloc Quebecois to cooperate in over 50 ridings. We are asking Canadians to unite to overcome weaknesses in the country's electoral system and galvanize citizens' growing commitment to preserve Canada's social democracy.

Our Call

Individuals and organizations interested and invested in protecting Canada's democracy are invited to support the "Cooperate for Canada" campaign.
